Consistent tripping out of lift plant within under stair electrical plant rooms due to water ingress resulted in NHBC employing a local contractor to devise a solution. Despite many thousands of pounds being spent on an internal cementitious “waterproof” slurry application, the problem remained.

H2Ox were then contacted by NHBC, to explore other more effective solutions. The H2Ox engineers advised that a systematic polyurethane resin injection system should be adopted. H2Ox are currently employed on this project and within the first week have completely sealed the most problematical lift plant room. H2Ox have now been retained to complete the remainder of the works.
